Orangutans face extinction

Introduction

For millennia, our closest animal relative (the orangutan) has roamed aimlessly through the endless rainforests of Borneo and Sumatra in relative peace. Outside orangutans seem like a predator. (Inside, however, all they want is their home to be left untouched.) Some people are fighting for the orangutan; others are setting down trees, thinking about what they are going to have for tea. Their numbers

A appearance

Orange and hairy, big and bold, orangutans are one of the fiercest creatures in the rainforest. This ape can range up to 1.5m tall. Their cheekbones are oddly large so as to show their dominance. Their bare arms can stretch up to 2m. Orangutans are superb climbers, superb due to their human-like hands. You may think that you are strong, but you are nothing compared to an orangutan. They are three times as strong as man.
